Network address translation (NAT) is a method of remapping one IP address space into another by modifying network address information in the IP header of packets while they are in transit across a traffic routing device. The technique was originally used as a shortcut to avoid the need to readdress every host when a network was moved.

One representative example of topological systems is the topological insulator (TI), which exhibits metallic surface states regardless of whether a finite band gap exists in the bulk. This scenario is beyond the scope of the classical band structure model, which distinguishes conductors and insulators in terms of gap size.

A second class of microbial opsin genes encodes halorhodopsins (Figure 1A). Halorhodopsin (HR) is a light-activated chloride pump first discovered in archaebacteria (Matsuno-Yagi and Mukohata, 1977). The operating principles of halorhodopsin (HR) are similar to those of BR (Essen, 2002), with the two main differences being that halorhodopsin pumps chloride ions and its direction of transport is ...
